Dear Dick:

What's happened to you? I got a note and a call once saying you were about to show up, but never heard a word.

A lawyer (?) named Wm. H. Grier showed up unannounced in our personnel office one morning and asked a lot of questions about you. I didn't see him, and heard about it later from our personnel coordinator. Grier evidently had Dunlap's name but not mine, and was trying to find who it was you know here. He never did, but I found out about Grier a few days later. He was quite a blabber-mouth. Here's what I learned he had said:

That he was working for Covington and Burley, Union Trust, Washington, on the Washington Post suit, and was investigating you.

That you use an alias, Richard Fullbright.

That they were going over everything about you, including your past in Minneapolis.

That they had reason to believe you had a communistic background, and had contacted communist agents to attempt to sell them your weapons system.

Because of this latter charge, our management sent a report on Grier's visit to the FBI, noting that either there was a serious security violation, or you were being defamed.

When I heard all this, I told our management you were an old friend and not a communist, and that I would send you this information about Grier's visit.

I've recently formed my own Corporation, Dick -- The enclosure will tell you something about it.

Best of luck in your suit.

Sincerely,

Charles R. Kelley, Ph.D.
